

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

It is an immense pleasure to convey my hearty thanks to many people who have helped and encouraged me for conducting this study. First of all, I express my heartfelt indebtedness and deepest sense of gratitude to my supervisors, Dr. Pinaki Das, Professor in Economics, Department of Economics with Rural Development, Vidyasagar University, West Bengal, and Dr. Debashis Mazumdar, Professor in Economics, Department of Economics, Heritage College, Kolkata, West Bengal for their scholarly guidance, care, enthusiasm, inspiration, and their great efforts to explain things clearly and simply. Throughout the period of my research, they provided me encouragement, sound advice, great teaching, great company, and lots of great ideas without which it was not possible to bring this study into reality.

I must thank all the teachers of the Department of Economics, Shibpur Dinobundhoo Institution (College) for their valuable suggestions and references which helped me a lot in working on my thesis. I remain indebted forever to Dr. Anis Mukhopadhyay, Ex-Professor of Economics, Shibpur Dinobundhoo Institution (College) for finding out some time for me from his extremely busy schedule and giving necessary instructions.

I wish to thank my parents and my family for being extremely supportive throughout the whole period of my research.
